Energy Jobs Galore!

The future's so bright for these employers, you might have to wear shades to the interview. This category includes America's utility companies, which need everything from linemen to nuclear operators and security to engineers and mechanics. Not a Navy nuke? No worries, these companies will train you for high-paying, in-demand jobs like linemen.

Experts predict that nearly 62 percent of the 525,000 workers in energy could retire or leave their jobs in the next 10 years, including 110,000 employees in the most critical jobs: line workers, technicians, plant and field operators, and engineers.

Then, too, you may have heard the U.S. is in the midst of an energy boom – turning places like North Dakota, Texas and Pennsylvania into modern-day boom regions. Shale gas and oil drilling and production mean the chance for transitioning veterans to earn six-figure salaries – without a college degree.

So whether it's working the oil patch, climbing poles or servicing wind turbines, this batch of Military Friendly® Employers has much to offer.

Did you know?

Nuclear plants pay their workers approximately 36 percent more than average salaries in the local area.
