

RETAIL

Check It Out

Retail companies have at least one thing in common with the military: they move, track and store ginormous amounts of goods. Who better to enlist in the effort than prior military?

Military Friendly® Employers in retail are looking for way more than just cashiers. They need experienced workers who know how to move and track the stuff Americans buy. So they need logisticians, drivers, mechanics, IT experts, human resources people, just to name a few.

And they need leaders. Managers of large retail stores often make six-figure salaries. Whatever your military specialty is, you can probably find a comparable career in retail. If you want to try something different, you could capitalize on your leadership skills and get into a training program for management. Whatever your interests lie, you'll probably find something in retail. So check it out.
